Stewardship Drive At Lac La Biche

Members and friends of the Lac la Biche and Hylo Evangelical Free Church gathered in the Lac la Biche church on Thursday, March 31, for a jubilee stewardship drive. Dr. H. Wilbur Norton, president of Trinity Seminary and College, Chicago, Illinois, was guest speaker. He was accompanied by Rev. Ivar Sellevaag of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and Rev. Carl J. Fosmark, prairie district superintendent, of Calgary. Dr. Norton gave a message tracing the history of the Free Church down to the present day.

The jubilee stewardship drive was part of an international program for progress marking the 75th anniversary of the Evangelical Free Churches. Fifty percent of all funds raised in the jubilee drive remain with the local church for a special project. The other 50 percent is used towards the establishment of a junior college in British Columbia and missionary work in Hong Kong. Lac la Biche and Hylo members pledged to give over $1000. This is in addition to regular church giving.

Dr. Norton Speaks At Evangelical Church

LAC LA BICHE — Dr. H. Wilbert Norton, president of Trinity College, Chicago ,was guest speaker at a "Program for Progress" drive held in the Evangelical Free Church, March 31. Rev. Carl Fosmark, Prairie district superintendent, Calgary, and Rev. Ivan Sellevaag, Rockford, Ill. were also present and spoke on various phases of the work of the Evangelical Free Church. Plans were discussed to complete the church here and the building of a much need parsonage.

The visiting clergy were much impressed by the spiritual needs of this north country and were sympathetic toward expanding the work throughout this area.

Birthday Party Held At Hylo

A double birthday party was held in honor of Miss Fay McEachern who was 15 and Leo Kaduik who was 16, on March 30 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. McEachern. They were showered with many beautiful gifts by their friends.

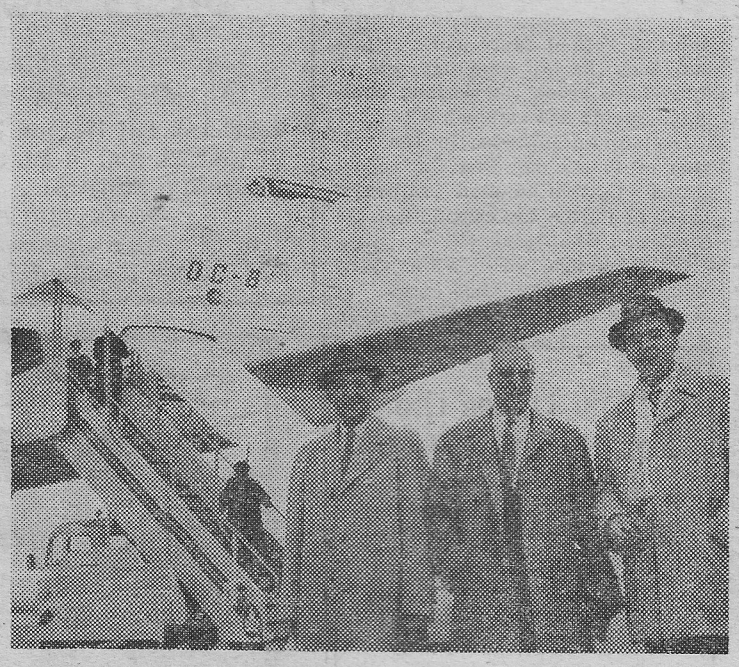
"HAPPY ROAD"

Family

A happy humorous story of a couple on a road to Paris.



THREE REPRESENTATIVES of the Edmonton press were aboard the inaugural flight from Vancouver to Montreal of TCA's new DC-8 passenger jet service. Just before boarding the 127-passenger aircraft, and standing under the towering tail (42 feet), are, left to right, Bernie Gagnon, manager of northern Alberta's French radio station, CHFA; Bill Hogle, news director of CFRN radio and television; and Ken Larson, managing editor of Sun Publishing's 21 weekly newspapers—Photo by Eugene Harder, Vancouver.

INAUGURAL FLIGHT

NEW TCA JET SERVICE PUTS PUNCH INTO OLD EXPRESSION

By Ken Larson

How quickly time flies! There's real truth in this expression now that Trans-Canada Airlines has introduced six-hour DC-8 passenger jet service between Vancouver and Montreal.

I was among 29 news and radio representatives from Alberta and British Columbia who were TCA's guests on the April 1st inaugural flight which carried 127 passengers. There were three from Edmonton: Bill Hogle, news director from CFRN, Bernie Gagnon, manager of CHFA, and myself.

The thing that impressed us most was the short time lapse between points that take many hours or days by car or rail. For instance, we were only an hour and a half out of Vancouver when the flight captain told us we were over Regina and 32 minutes away from Winnipeg.

You won't be able to use the excuse that the noise of the motors makes you tired. That's a thing of the past on the $6,000,000 DC-8. If you've a sensitive tummy, you'll also find there's very little motion, if any, because the plane cruises between 30,000 and 35,000 feet, well above rough weather.

Afraid of height? The 150-ton DC-8 is so solid beneath your feet you have no sensation of being six miles above the earth. And because of the altitude, 610 miles per hour seems no faster than say a Viscount traveling at 300 mph at three and a half miles up.

One ride on a TCA jet that permits a person to have breakfast between Montreal and Toronto, and dinner between Regina and somewhere in the Rockies, is sufficient to convince you the jet age is here to stay.

This talk of 2,000 mph passenger seems more plausible now I suppose the problems of speed causing friction which produces heat will have to be overcome. In the DC-8 there's a similar problem. Although the Fahrenheit temperature outside the craft at 34,000 ft. will read 54 below zero, it isn't a matter of keeping the interior of the plane hot—it's keeping it cool! Two air conditioning units which could handle 14 six-room houses counteract the heat of friction created by high speeds. At the same time, they keep the plane cigarette smoke-free and distribute even room temperature heat.

We toured the $20,000,000 overhaul and maintenance base at Dorval airport in Montreal which will employ 3,000 persons. The overhaul hangar is the largest cantilever structure of its type in the world. The single-cantilever roof spanning 175 feet is suspended by structural steel members from 110-foot columns.

Edmonton will be serviced by DC-8's early next year, as soon as they become available from the manufacturer. Then if you're going east or west, don't miss an opportunity to do it safely, quickly and comfortably in a TCA DC-8 jet.

ANOTHER RECORD SET BY TCA

MONTREAL (UPI)—A Trans-Canada Airlines DC-8 broke all commercial aircraft records for trans-continental service with a Vancouver to Montreal trip in four hours, 17 minutes, TCA officials announced Sunday night.

The plane, flight 850, landed in Montreal after travelling 2,340 air miles at an average altitude of 37,000 feet. It was the third eastbound flight since TCA inaugurated the jet service on April 1.

Annual Meet Occasion For Members To Exercise Ownership, Co-op Told

HYLO — A large attendance turned out for the annual Hylo Co-operative meeting which was held on March 26 in the Hylo school. Alex Moshuk, vice-president, occupied the chair, as President Carl Keehn was unable to attend due to being hospitalized.

It was regretted that J. Woynarowich, auditor, was not able to attend to explain the financial report.

Shares which accumulated through allocations, were presented to the following people: A. Bourassa; J. Chomik; M. Lewiski; B. Owchar; O. Piven; W. Sawchuk and Roy Warren. Five others: M Biollo; P. Owchar; M. Mohowich; A. Subchuk and V. Zevola, were not present to receive their shares. Congratulations on behalf of the Co-op members were extended to the new shareholders.

The three directors whose terms of office had expired were A. Moshuk, William Lozinski and S. Nahirny. A. Moshuk was re-elected and the two new directors elected were A. Michetti and M. Tichonuk. The six other directors were Cary Keehn, John Coli, F. Marchesi, G. Michetti, H. Stratichuk and M. Zalewsky.

The by-laws which were adopted through the years were read for the benefit of the new shareholders.

H. Stratichuk, in his report of the proceedings of the directors' meetings through the year, stressed the fact that the annual meeting is the occasion for members to exercise their ownership of the co-operative association. It is the only opportunity the members have to exercise their authority and final control. At the annual meeting members should review the record of those who serve the co-operative and exercise their right to pass judgment on the performance of directors and management, he said.

After a lengthy discussion it was decided to look into the matter of building an addition to the Co-op store and if feasible to do so.

Wiring of the store for electricity and a number of other business items were discussed briefly.

A report on the Co-operative education movement and its significance in the future was given by Alex Moshuk.

Albert Michetti announced that a baking demonstration using co-operative products is being planned in the near future so watch for more information later.

The winners of the raffle of Co-op groceries were: first prize, Mrs. William Lozinski; second prize went to Mrs. A. Bourassa and Mrs. Meardi won the third prize.

Lunch served by Mrs. A. Bourassa, Mrs. William Lozinski, Miss C. Stratichuk, Mrs. M. Coli and Mrs. M. Zalewsky, concluded an interesting meeting.

Financial Results "Disappointing" Says CNR In Its Annual Report

OTTAWA — Canadian National Railways, according to its annual report tabled in the House of Commons, was able to combine increased revenues and a tight control of operating expenses to close the year 1959 with a "modest improvement in its net financial result."

Railway operating revenues of $740.2 million, improved by $35.3 million over those of 1958, exceeded operating expenses by $19.4 million for a betterment of $14.5 million in net revenue from railway operations. However, a further increase of $6.4 million in fixed charges left the railway with a deficit of $43.6 million—$8.0 million less than 1958's deficit.

Due mainly to higher wages and extended fringe benefits which cost the company an additional $21.4 million, the report states operating expenses increased by $20.8 million to $720.8 million. However, the report notes that 1958 expenses included a non-recurring item of $7.5 million in depreciation. Without this item, a comparison would show 1959 expenses increased by $13.3 million.

Carrying the expense comparison further, the report points out that if it were not for the higher wage rates and extended fringe benefits "1959 expenses would have been $8.1 million below those recorded in 1958. This constructive decrease in cost, which was achieved in the face of an increased work load, is illustrative of the real improvements . . . . made in the company's operations."

Management is now faced with additional demands which would amount to $57 million if fully implemented, the report notes.

"The financial results were most disappointing," the report says, "particularly when considered in in relation to the record level reached by the Gross National Product.

"The fact that the revenues of the Canadian National and indeed of the railway industry in general, did not reflect more closely this buoyancy in the economy brings into sharp focus the serious challenge facing managements."

Despite an increase in the volume of traffic handled the report states that Canadian railways' share of the transportation market continued to decline.

On increase in CNR's fixed charges reflected the extent of necessary capital expenditures in recent years and also the sharp increase in the cost of money.

These and other factors were "indicative of the complex and imposing task ahead" for the CNR. "Some of the problems are beyond the control of management, particularly those related to freight rates and a Royal Commission . . . is now inquiring into this and other aspects of railway transportation."

AN ARTIST'S CONCEPTION of the new Variable Depth Sonar (VDS) to be used by the Royal Canadian navy for submarine detection is shown here. VDS, the result of more than ten years' research and development by Defence Research Board scientists of the Naval Research Establishment, Halifax, enables warships to lower sonar gear through the ocean's thermal layers, thereby overcoming submarines' ability to escape detection in or below these layers. The drawing shows sonar gear lowered from a typical RCN destroyer escort detecting a submarine "hiding" in a thermal layer (lighter strata of water) while sonar beam from the conventional transmitter is deflected back to the surface.—National Defence photo.

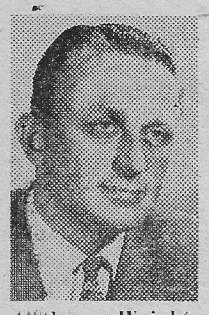
Ottawa Report

By Anthony J. Wright

Many people in Ottawa know that after John Diefenbaker, Finance Minister Fleming is one of the "strongest" members of the cabinet. They also know that he and Governor Coyne are among the leaders of the Ottawa group that believes thrift is a better policy than drift. Balancing budgets & paying off heavy foreign debts are prime virtues of this school of thought.



Anthony Wright

There is another school of thought, Mr. Diefenbaker and Trade Minister Churchill being among its pupils, who tend to think that by selling more and producing more we will be better able to carry our debts. Recent trade figures, which show that for January-February our sales to other nations were well up over the same months of 1959, have given this second group some encouragement.

Only time will tell which theory best fits the facts. The experts agree on the basic ingredients of our economic condition but, like all experts, they differ on the meaning of the figures before them.

Quite apart from the limelight playing on Mr. Fleming in this post-budget week, he stands out as an extraordinary man. For example the House of Commons was surprised to learn not long ago that he used to be a farm laborer. He used this argument when explaining, for opposition critics, an item in supplementing estimates of the agriculture department.

BOMARC BATTLE:

The Diefenbaker government came off best in the argument over the Bomarc. They showed that, as defence experts see the situation now, the northeastern industrial complex of this continent will be defended in part by the Bomarc anti-aircraft missile. Of the 14 Bomarc units, two will be in eastern Canada, as announced earlier. If the Bomarc 'B" missile, able to fell a 500-miles-an-hour at 400 miles range, is never successfully proved, the whole plan will have to be revamped.

When I say the government had the best of the argument about defence, I do not mean that they are happy about our defence. But they did successfuly uphold their stand that Canada can no longer "go it alone" and must accept the weapons that only Washington has the money to evolve and build.

However much Canadians may regret this state of affairs there is nothing much we can do about it. That seems to be the official Ottawa position.

OTTAWA BRIEFS:

The Immigration Department pays only a maximum of $3,900 to "Immigration Officers" examining persons entering Canada by rail, ship or plane ,according to a recent advertisement. This is surely too small a salary for a job which gives the officer power to turn away an immigrant who may have worked for years to get the money and courage to come here to start a new life. A responsible job should surely merit a commensurate salary. Otherwise the best men may not be found for it. The Governor General, Major General Georges Vanier, is not the only man around here who gave a leg at the gruesome battle of Paschendaele while fighting bravely with the doughty 22nd Regiment (Van Doos). A companion in arms, who lost a leg about the same time, with the same outfit, is elevator operator Maurice Girouard of the House of Commons staff, one of the most controversial columnists, Beverly Baxter, will no longer be pleasing, or displeasing, the readers of Maclean's. Under the new editorial arrangements made by the magazine Baxter's chatter about London is, I understand, to be dropped. Police seized 2¼ million cigarettes last year smuggled across our borders. Most smuggies cross the border near Montreal.

The average city slicker has the idea that the farmer ought to grow cheap food for him whether the farmer makes a decent living out of the crop or not.

Whist Party

NORMANDEAU — A whist drive, held at Irene school March 27, was well attended.

Prizes for the ladies were awarded to Mrs. Eugene Turgeon and Mrs. Leoza Turgeon, with consolation going to JoAnne Turgeon.

Men's prizes went to Father Picotte and Paul Ulliac, with consolation won by Denis Hebert.

The door prize was awarded to Mrs. Aurele Turgeon.

When it's time to eat, the average worker will lay down his tools, and pronto.

The Three Faces Of Eve

By Corbett H. Thigpen, M.D., and Hervey M. Cleckley, M.D.

This is the true story of one of the most remarkable cases of multiple personality in all medical history, told by the two doctors who treated the case. Two different and distinct personalities were battling for possession of the patient's body. Mostly, Eve White, a shy, demure housewife, was in command. But occasionally, Eve Black, a saucy, flirtatious party girl, emerged. The patient seemed to improve somewhat during a stay in the hospital.

Chapter 7

Eve White remained in the hospital for approximately two weeks. She received no specific treatment other than psychotherapy. She seemed to gain steadily in strength and confidence and to make general improvement.

For about two months improvement continued. Eve White returned from time to time for interviews. She was free from headaches and had suffered no more blackouts of which she was conscious. Occasionally there had been a lost lapse of time, brought to her attention by the clock, by the suddenly lengthened shadows, or by her husband's arrival for lunch when she was sure breakfast had been finished less than half an hour before. Such things indicated that her alternate had been in command.

Usually the transitions occurred smoothly enough, for Eve Black seldom came out except when Mrs. White was alone or among strangers where no one would be likely to recognize the alteration.

Eve Black, too, was on the whole encouraging in her reports. The couple were getting along a little better, she thought, though by no means as well as Eve White tried to tell herself. She herself wouldn't put up for five minutes with Ralph or with any of his ways. It didn't trouble her too much for the other Eve to be living with him. As for her, she gave him little thought; she never came out in his presence, and so didn't "have to bother with the dumb muttonhead."

HER EARLY HISTORY

Fortunately we were able to interview Eve White's parents several times during this period. Through them, through Eve White's sisters, her cousin Flo, and through other members of the family, we were able to obtain valuable historic details of the patient's life.

We were both surprised and dubious when Eve Black told us she had enjoyed an independent life even since Eve White's childhood. She told us freely of episodes 20 or more years ago in which she had allegedly emerged, usually to engage in acts of mischief or disobedience.

Since Eve White, whose word on any matter always proved good, had no access to the other's current awareness or her memory, it was impossible through her to check directly and immediately on Eve Black's stories. Her memory did, however, confirm reports of certain punishments she had received in childhood, of accusations made against her for deeds unknown to her but described to us by Eve Black.

SOBER, RELIABLE PEOPLE

Some of these stories were substantiated through the parents and other members of the family. Eve White's parents impressed us as sober, reliable people, conservative citizens of a small rural community.

The mother and father both clearly recalled several incidents that Eve Black had previously reported to us. They had had to punish their ordinarily good 6-year-old daughter for having disobeyed their specific rule against wandering through the woods to play with the children of a tenant farmer whose house was approximately a half mile away. On her return Eve had received a hearty whipping despite her desperate and persistant denials of wrongdoing and disobedience.

Almost as surprising as disobedience and lying in such a good child was the daring with which she had wandered home through the darkening woods. Eve was timid and had for some time shown abnormal fear about going near the ditch under the bridge where a man had been found dead. This evening she had boldly loitered there.

IMMUNE TO PAIN

Eve Black had previously described this incident to us in some detail, expressing satisfaction and amusement about having "come out" to engage in and thoroughly enjoy the forbidden adventure, and particularly in having been able to withdraw and leave the other Eve, to appreciate the sensations of the whipping.

Though Eve Black, when "in," preserved a considerable degree of indirect awareness of the other world through Eve White's thoughts and perceptions, she insisted that she was totally immune from any physical pain suffered by the latter and from any other sensations she experienced.

The adult Eve White recalled this and several other punishments which she had had no way of understanding and which had sometimes deeply confused her in her relations with her parents.

The relatively tranquil period subsequent to Eve White's hospitalization did not last. The husband's role was undeniably difficult. Though he tried with patience and understanding to make the marriage a happy one, he could find little true intimacy at home, nothing that seemed like a warm lively response from his wife.

FRUSTRATED DISCOURAGED

As Ralph's frustration and discouragement progressively increased, and he began to spend more time seeking some little fragments of pleasure or diversion away from home, Eve, as if helplessly borne away by an ebbing tide, became more remote.

Large and small troubles continued to accumulate. Eve Black seemed to be steadily waxing. She gained control more often and flaunted her freedom with increasing boldness. On rare occasions she emerged deliberately before Ralph while [illegible] taunt and deride him. During interviews the physician found her less conciliatory, more openly determined to have her own way at any cost.

After no word had come from the Whites for a longer period than usual, a short note was received by the physician. It was signed with the initials E.B. In a careless scrawl was written:

"Doc,

"I thonk I ought to let you know. J.W. is quite sick. She tried to kill herself this morning. I was able to stop [illegible] and don't know about it. She's promised herself that nobody must ever know. I know you should. "I'm not sure she won't try it again."

SHE DENIES IT

A telephone call was made. Eve White agreed to come for another interview without delay. She denied all knowledge of the note but admitted [illegible] had been desperately unhappy. It was true that she had thought of suicide. But because of Bonnie and because of her religious convictions, she felt that she would never take such a step.

Then with painful reluctance she said that she had at last reached a decision to leave her husband. She did not want a divorce. The only hope she could see for the marriage might be in temporary separation.

Most of all, her fears about Bonnie had brought her to this decision. She could not, she had been forced to realize, look after her little girl adequately until she got better. And although Eve White spoke calmly of getting better, it seemed plain that she had little real hope of this.

So it was arranged for Bonnie to go and live with Mrs. White's mother and father, who still lived in the distant rural home where she herself had been born. Eve herself would find a job and work to support Bonnie. Ralph was going to a city in another state with the intention of starting over in his business.

"HALF DAZED"

After the interview with Eve White, the other Eve was summoned. She first expressed pleasure in the plans for separation. "Maybe the poor old gal will get some sense in her yet," she said with an easy smile. No, she had not exaggerated what she wrote about in her note. She had been aware of her alternate's thoughts as they progressed and accumulated to the awful resolution.

"She must have been half dazed. I guess," this Eve said, now a little more intent than usual. "She started into the bathroom and was so worked up she could hardly find her way. I could tell she was going after the razor and was going to cut her wrist. Not just a little cut, like I might do if I really wanted to carry on. She was going to kill herself."

"Whether she remembered it or not, I knew nobody'd be back for an hour or two to do anything about it. She'd be dead by then." Pausing now, as she shifted a little in the chair, she added wistfully, "And that would have meant I'd be dead, too."

During [illegible] able to "get out," Eve Black said, it had seemed for a while that she might fail. "Something awful was on her mind something I never was up against before."

Shaking and uncoordinated but with unswerving resolution, Eve White had banged open the medicine chest and seized the stiff single-edged razor blade. Apparently wild with haste, she had lost hold of the blade. The other hand, fumbling to regain possession, knocked it to the floor beyond a clothes basket.

"She'd already grabbed it again and was about to cut when I finally got out," Eve Black said. "I think she meant business, Doc."

GOT A JOB

Approximately a week later, the household having been disbanded, Eve White began work with a large corporation located only about 15 miles from our offices. She had found a better-than-average opening there.

She found a room in a modest boarding house which she planned to share with another girl.

Was such a move as this merely progress from the frying pan into the fire? In her present condition would she be able to hold this job? Ar any job? Freed from whatever restraining influence the White's home may have imposed upon her, what would Eve Black now do?

Was it possible that such a manifestation as Eve Black might come out to stay?

Next Week:-Eve White has trouble holding a job because of Eve Black's mischievousness

(From the book The Three Faces of Eve, copyright 1957 by Corbett H. Thigpen and Hervey M. Cleckley, and published by McGraw Hill Book Co., Inc.) Distributed by The Register and Tribune Syndicate.

"SHE MUST HAVE BEEN half dazed," Eve Black said. "I could tell she was going after the razor. She was going to kill herself!"

THE Homemaker

By BERTHA M. McCUTCHEON

If starching is done according to directions it keeps fabrics crisp and smooth for a considerable period. It also makes them easier to launder. There are three types of starch.

1. Vegetable is the most common type, and is made of corn starch. It must be used after each washing. Vegetable starches may contain bluing, perfume and an ironing aid. They come in liquid or dry form and the latter may be lumps, cubes or powder. Some may be mixed with cold water but directions should be followed carefully.

B. McCutcheon

2. Plastic starches are always in liquid form. They do not wash out of fabrics as easily as vegetable starches so do not need to be used washday. It is difficult to maintain a uniform crispness in a garment from one washing to the next. Be sure to follow instructions especially when a chlorine bleach is used.

3. C.M.C. based sodium carboxymethyl cellulose is a finish which coats the fibres to increase resistance to soiling rather than a starch. It does not impart stiffness and is easily removed by laundering. Most synthetic detergents contain C.M.C.

STARCHING HINTS

When starching in a washer put starch into the final rinse or the machine can be reset after the complete cycle. The wash cycle is better than the rinse cycle if the washer has an overflow rinse. Rinse the washer with clear water after starching. Or starching may be done at the end of the first wash load and further wash loads will remove the starch from the basket of the washer. When starching dark colored cottons tint the starch with bluing for blues and blacks, tea for browns and commercial tints for other colors.

FABRIC SOFTENERS

The softener should be added to the clohtes after bluing but before starching if all are used. Fabric softeners are effective in all kinds of weather. They reduce wrinkling and matting, reduce static electricity and aid in ironing. They impart softness and fluffiness by forming a coating on the surface of each fibre which permits the strands of yarn to slip easily over one another.

The degree of softening or conditioning depends on the amount of softener used for the amount of clothes treated so dilution has no effect. Clothes are treated with a fabric softener then dried in a clothes dryer are as soft as those hung on the line.

SNAPPY ANSWER

Two farmers were sitting on the front porch of the general store when a city slicker drove up in a flashy convertible.

"Hey, you," yelled the driver "how long has this town been dead?"

"Can't be long," snapped back one of the natives; "You're the first buzzard we've seen."
